Overview:

Eating disorders extend far beyond food; they are coping mechanisms rooted in deeper emotional or psychological challenges. In psychotherapy, the goal is not merely to eliminate disordered eating behaviors, but to understand and address the reasons behind them. To help clinicians provide the best possible care, Jenna Jones—a psychotherapist specializing in eating disorder treatment—has created an immersive, hands-on workshop. This training equips participants with specialized assessment tools and therapeutic strategies for effectively supporting individuals with eating disorders.

In this workshop, you'll learn to integrate eating-disorder-specific approaches at every stage of intervention, from initial screening and evaluation to the implementation of tailored interventions in practice. Participants will gain a thorough understanding of the various types of eating disorders, their distinct clinical presentations, and the nuanced strategies required to address them. Through detailed, evidence-based instruction, attendees will explore the intricate relationship between disordered eating symptoms, emotions, food, body image, thought processes, and interpersonal relationships. The workshop also emphasizes relevant terminology and clinical language, helping clinicians communicate more effectively and compassionately with this population.

Central to the workshop is the application of Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) for clinical interventions. You will also be introduced to complementary therapeutic modalities—including Dialectical Behavior Therapy (DBT), Motivational Interviewing, Acceptance and Commitment Therapy (ACT), Mindful Self-Compassion Theory, Shame Resilience Theory, and Family Systems Theory—and learn how these additional approaches can enhance the effectiveness of CBT, particularly in addressing the complex emotional, cognitive, and relational dynamics often present in individuals with eating disorders.

1. Develop a comprehensive understanding of the symptoms associated with eating disorders
2. Conduct thorough and effective evaluations of individuals presenting with eating disorders
