Overview:

Narcissistic abuse leaves enduring psychological wounds. Gaslighting, manipulation, intermittent reinforcement, and emotional invalidation often generate complex trauma responses—chronic self-doubt, anxiety, depression, and disruptions in identity and relational functioning.

This advanced clinical training offers mental health professionals a comprehensive framework for understanding and treating survivors of narcissistic abuse. It highlights the distinctive dynamics of this form of trauma, situates it within attachment and developmental theory, and examines its impact on self-worth, regulation, and interpersonal bonds.

Grounded in contemporary trauma science, you will:

- Refine your clinical eye to detect subtle patterns of narcissistic abuse and evaluate their effects on identity formation, attachment, and nervous system regulation.
- Strengthen your treatment framework to distinguish narcissistic abuse from other relational traumas and adapt interventions accordingly.
- Apply evidence-based strategies for trauma processing, somatic stabilization, and identity reconstruction.
- Integrate focused therapeutic tools to work with shame, restore boundaries, and support authentic selfhood.

Drawing on four decades of clinical expertise, Dr. Patti Ashley provides a nuanced, shame-informed methodology that addresses not only symptoms but the core psychological injuries inflicted by narcissistic abuse. By the end of this training, you will be equipped with advanced assessment tools, intervention protocols, and a clinically grounded roadmap to guide clients from crisis toward lasting recovery and
