Overview:

NWe can all think of clients that have challenged our skills and professional efficacy. More often than not, these clients tended to fall along the personality disorder spectrum, specifically the antisocial, narcissistic, or borderline spectrum.

In this presentation, Dr. Fox will break down these pathologies into workable constructs to help you achieve therapeutic gains and success with ease and clarity of mind.

He will explain:

- How to identify and manage critical factors associated with the stage of treatment;
- How to counter maladaptive patterns disrupts your clients' lives and impedes successful treatment;
- How to apply evidence-based treatment modalities and assess therapeutic change;
- How to address surface and core maladaptive patterns.

This course is designed as a practical toolkit with concrete strategies and case studies to inspire and bolster your clinical work.

Learning objectives:

1. Identify and manage critical factors associated with the stage of treatment for clients with antisocial, narcissistic, and borderline pathology.
2. Identify and counter maladaptive patterns that often disrupt your clients' lives and thwart successful treatment.
3. Apply evidence-based treatment modalities in your practice and produce therapeutic change.
4. Implement techniques to address surface and core maladaptive patterns in your clients and perpetuation of success strategies for your clients.
